

PLAN MONSTER FUNERAL FOR MISS EMILY WILDING DAVISON

Miss Emily Wilding Davison.

London, June 9.—The first woman to give her life to the cause of suffrage was Miss Emily Wilding Davison, who died late yesterday at Epson Cottage Hospital as a result of the injuries she received when she attempted to grasp the bridle of the king's horse in last week's derby.

At the headquarters of the Women's Social and Political Union in King's Way, the flag is at half mast in honor of the dead woman. The suffragets are planning for the biggest funeral that London ever saw, not even excepting that of the late King Edward VII.

It is their intention to make the death of Miss Davison the most impressive object lesson Great Britain has had for a generation, bringing home to every man and woman in the United Kingdom the realization that the women's battle for the ballot is a real revolution and not opera bouffe and story book warfare.

The coffin of Miss Davison, lying in the hospital, was covered with the suffraget colors, white and yellow, and a guard of militants surrounded the building, all of them wearing mourning bands about their sleeves.

It is possible that Home Secretary McKenna may forbid a public funeral, and Scotland Yard is waiting instructions.

NINE OFFICIALS OF UNITED MINEWORKERS INDICTED

Charleston, W. Va., June 9.—President John V. White and eight other officials of the United Mineworkers of America were indicted, charged with conspiring with coal operators to raise the wages in the West Virginia fields so as to prevent the state from competing with other coal fields in the Western markets.

President John P. White, discussing the indictment, said: "It looks to me like an attempt on the part of the operators to divert public attention from anything that may be turned up by the Kern probe committee."

FIRE WIPES OUT WHOLE BLOCK AT SPRINGFIELD, MO.

Springfield, Mo., June 9.—Fire starting early today in the basement of the Heer Dry Goods Company's store swept the entire northeast corner of the square, entailing a loss estimated at between $700,000 and $1,000,000.

This square obtained notoriety in March, 1906, when a mob hanged and burned three negroes at the Goddess of Liberty tower on an Easter Sunday morning.

Actress Trixie Friganza, who used to be Delia O'Callahan of Cincinnati, says she believes in reincarnation and hopes that in her next existence she'll be a cow, she's so fond of salads.
